FAQ's

What is a credit reference agency?

They collect and maintain information on the credit behaviour of consumers and businesses, on behalf of organisations in the UK. Some examples are Experian, TransUnion or Equifax.

What is a fraud prevention agency?

They collect, maintain and share information on known and suspected fraudulent activity. Some credit reference agencies also act as fraud prevention agencies.

Why do you use these agencies?

Although you have applied to Powershop for energy supply and we will conduct our own checks, we need to make the best possible assessment on your overall situation before we make an assessment of whether we are prepared to supply you. Credit reference agencies can supply us with information on your credit behaviour which assists us with this assessment.

Where do credit reference agencies get their information?

From a mixture of publicly available information such as the electoral register, county court judgments and records of bankruptcy and similar orders, plus fraud prevention agencies, plus other organisations who share information with them such as banks, building societies, credit card companies and other utility providers.

How will I know if you are sending my information to these agencies?

This leaflet sets out the circumstances in which we will send information to these agencies. If we plan to send your payment history information to these agencies we will let you know. You can ask us for the name(s) of the credit referral agencies we use at any time.

Who controls what the agencies do with my data?

All organisations that collect and process data are regulated by the Data Protection Act 1998, overseen by the Information Commissioner's Office. All credit reference agencies are in regular dialogue with the Commissioner. Use of the Electoral Roll is controlled under the Representation of the People Act 2000.

Can just anyone look at my data held at credit reference agencies?

No. Access to your information is very strictly controlled so that only those entitled to do so may see it. Usually that's only with your agreement or (very occasionally) if there's a legal requirement.

If you would like to see what information a credit reference agency or fraud prevention agency holds about you, you can contact those currently operating in the UK. The information they hold may not be the same so it is worth contacting them all. They will charge a small statutory fee.
